

Leah Speckhard Bio

Leah was born near Washington, D.C. but spent high school and university in Belgium, and has lived in Greece for the past two years. She has loved singing since she was a child and sang with her big family. She studied classical voice music in university for a semester, but decided she wanted to pursue contemporary music instead and began working on her own. She has been writing songs since she was 18 years old, mostly drawing inspiration from her love life and the complicated nature of romantic relationships. She wrote “Little Fingertips” for her sister’s baby Katarina, who just turned 1 year old, and is also her goddaughter. Some of her influences are Alanis Morissette, Jewel, Lauryn Hill, Ben Folds, and 60s Motown music, and she considers her own music a mix of pop and folk music. She really wants to collaborate with Timbaland someday, and can’t get enough of the TV show American Idol.